

University Supervisory Board

The University Supervisory Board is the university's statutory supervisory body, comparable to the supervisory board of a company, and responsible for the development of the higher education institution.

Responsibilities;

The University Supervisory Board supervises the Rectorate, which administers the university and fulfills the provisions set out in Article 20, paragraph 1 of the Statutory Law for higher-use institutions in Great Britain. The University Supervisory Board is responsible, inter alia, for the approval of the established strategic plans and the university budget by the Rectorate and deans. The University Supervisory Board also negotiates the establishment of new university institutions and changes and liquidation procedures in existing institutions. In addition, the University Supervisory Board monitors the effectiveness of the measures taken and the costs taken by the Rectorate and schools.

As the supervisory body, the University Supervisory Board gives impetus to the long-term position of the university.
